Annilal, sis. m. A Carthaginian of great valour and conduct, well versed in all the stratagems of war. While he was a boy, his father Amilcar made him swear at the altar, that when he was grown up he would make war with the Romans, and never make any peace with them. Accordingly, when he was of age, he passed over into Spain, beat the Gauls at the river Rhone, then marched his army over the Alps, vanquished Sempronius the Roman consul at Trebia, routed the consul Flaminius at Thrasymene, and though worsted a little by Q. Fab. Maximus, he recovered new courage, and fought with the two consuls, Paulus Æmilius and Terentius Varro, and entirely defeated them, forty thousand foot, and two thousand seven hundred horse, falling in that field;

and if he had marched directly to Rome, as he was advised, it is probable there had been an end of the Roman name. But, happily for Rome, he led his troops to Capua, where, they were so betoited with the rich wines of Italy, as never to be under any command afterwards. At length, being overcome by Scipio Africanus, he fled to Bythynia, and ended his life by poison, which for that purpose he had reserved in a ring.

Antoninus Commodus was the successor to his empire, but not to his virtues.

M. Antoninus, An eloquent orator, slain with many other great men by the Marian faction. He had two sons, Marcus and Caius, the former whereof was a very prodigate man. The latter, commanding some troops of Sylla's horse, plundered many places in Greece. Marcus Antoninus, son to the former of these, and grandson of the orator, was the fomentor of the civil war: for, being tribune, he left the city privately, and fled into Gaul to Caesar. He invaded the province of Brutus, and by the persuasion of Cicero, the senate voted him an enemy to the republic. He was beaten by the two consuls, M. Titius and Pansa, and young Caesar; but soon after he joined in a league with Octavius and Lepidus, and so their government was called a triumvirate. Immediately upon this he vanquished the forces of Brutus and Cassius at Philippi in Macedonia. He divorced his wife Fulvia, to marry Octavia, sister to Octavius. For the love he bore to Cleopatra queen of Egypt, he divorced her also, which Octavius resenting, made war upon him, overcame him in a sea fight at Actium, and forced him to flee to Alexandria, where, being besieged by Caesar, in despair he fell upon his own sword.

XANTHIPPE, es. f. The wife of Socrates, so imperious and clamorous a woman, that she would have been intolerable to any other man; and even to him, as he confessed, if she had not borne him children.

Xanthippus, i. m. A valiant and successful Spartan commander who, after the Carthaginians had been beaten by the Romans both by sea and land, was sent for, to command their forces; which he did with such success, that he took Attalus Regulus prisoner, but was ill rewarded for his great services.

Xanthus, i. m. A river near Troy, called also Xanander. It arises in mount Ida, and is discharged into the Hellespont.

Xenocrates, is. m. A philosopher of Chalcedon, one of Plato's scholars at the same time as Aristotle; of whom their master used to say the former wanted spurs, the latter reins. He succeeded Speusippus in his school.

Xenophanes, is. m. A philosopher of Colophon. He lived in the fortieth Olympiad, and wrote against the account of the gods given by Homer and Hesiod.

Xenophon, ontis. m. A scholar of Socrates, eminent for religion, justice, and all moral and civil virtues; also for the military art. He was very well respected by the younger Cyrus, who gave him a military command. Under the character of the elder Cyrus, he draws the image of a perfect and every way accomplished prince, in eight books, in a most sweet and natural style, without the least affectation.

Xerxes, is. m. A king of Persia, the son of Darius. He was a very haughty prince, but very weak and unsuccessful. He prosecuted the war with the Athenians begun by his father, invading Greece with 700,000 men of his own kingdoms, and 300,000 auxiliaries, and 12,000 ships. But this great and numerous army wanted a commander; for the king, who should have led them to battle, was always the last in the field, and the first in flight. De Xerxis histor. vid. Justin. and Herod.

Z.

ZALEUCUS, i. m. A Locranian lawgiver, who enacted, that adulterers should lose their eyes. His son was found guilty, and he in pity to his son pulled out one of his own eyes, and one of his son's, that two eyes might be forfeited to the law.

Zama, &c. f. An island of Aïrie, three days' journey from Carthage. Here Scipio gained a great victory against Hannibal.

Zelandia, &c. f. Zealand, a province of the United Netherlands. Also an isle of Denmark, near the Baltic.

Zeno, Æn. m. A citizen of Citium in Cyprus, the founder of the sect of the Stoics. The reputation of his integrity was so great at Athens, that they left the keys of the city at his house, presented him with a gold-garland, and set up his statue in brass. He compared logic to a close fist, and rhetoric to an open hand. He lived 90 years in health, and at last strangled himself. He placed summa bonum in virtue.

Zenobia, &c. f. The wife of Odenatus, king of the Palmyrenians, a learned lady, who spoke the Greek and Egyptian tongues readily; she improved much in the Latin; she understood the Eastern history so well that she is said to have composed it. After Aurelian's triumph over her, she was used very cruelly, and lived in Tibur.

Zenodotus, i. m. (1) A grammarian, keeper of the first Ptolemaic library at Alexandria and school-master to his sons. (2) Another a grammarian likewise of Alexandria, who revived the censures of Aristarchus upon Homer; which Aristarchus lived in the time of Ptolemy Philometor. He wrote against Ptolemy concerning the gods.

Zollus, i. m. A grammarian of Amphipolis, called Homocroasis, or Homer's scourge, because he wrote against Homer. He also caped at the writings of Plato, and other approved authors; whence it came to pass that Zollus was contemptuously used for any snarling critic. Terentius makes him contemporary with Ptolemaeus Philadelphus, but Eschylus throws him back to the 95th Olympiad.

Zōnāras, &c. m. A Constantinopolitan historian, who ends where Nicephorus begins, and where he ends Nicephorus begins. His works are extant.

Zōpsrus, i. m. A nobleman of Persia, who, when Darius had besieged Babylon in vain, named himself by cutting off his nose and ears, and fled to the Babylonians; they being moved with pity, and taking him to be dangerously wounded, made him their general, and he taking a convenient time, delivered the city to his master. He gratefully said, he would rather have Zopyrus whole, than take twenty Babylons. A physiognomist of this name, looking on Socrates's face, said he was a passionate and disordered man; and being denied and abused for his opinion, Socrates said, in his favour, His judgment is right. I was naturally such, but philosophy hath cured me.

Zoroastres, is. He is said to be king of the Bactrians, contemporary with Ninus, king of Assyria. He was the first that studied magic, astronomy, and the Chaldean art. Some have taken him for (said the son, or Maraim the grandson, of Noah. Several other magicians of this name are mentioned by writers, but there is no certainty of any except him, who was a friend of Cyrus the Great, and attended him in his expeditions.

Zōstunus, i. m. A Greek historian, who wrote of Constantine, and the following emperors, but was very severe against the Christians, he being an obstinate heathen. His work is extant.
